J W LAMBERT

The well-known firm of Settle printers, bookbinders and stationers began life in 1861 in a cottage on Well Hill. James Lambert subsequently purchased the lease of premises in Cheapside in 1891. The printing side of the business, named the 'Caxton Press', was particularly important and produced a wide range of material from books to tickets and handbills. Although the family link has now gone, the name is continued to the present day.

James Lambert and his wife, Mary Tant Rawlinson

HARGER BROTHERS

The business was founded in 1812 by Robert Harger, a native of Settle, as a firm of fretwork specialists. During the 19th century Hargers also undertook a variety of work, including some general building and it was not until the turn of the 20th century that they specialised as cabinet makers and household furnishers.

100 NOT OUT!

By JOHN THORPE

'Shell shop' is going strong

THE village shop — centre-piece of life in rural communities — has been going through hard times of late, and many have closed their doors never to reopen.

But there's no such gloom among the Lambert dynasty in the Dales village of Settle — they've reached another milestone in an illustrious business venture that began in 1882, and still thrives.

For it's a century ago that James Wilcock Lambert moved his business into what locals and visitors alike know nowadays as the "shell shop" because of the distinctive canopy that marks the entrance to what these days is an Aladdin's cave.

It's Mrs Kathleen Lambert who now heads the family shop in Cheapside which was set up in the double-fronted premises with a £200 loan.

James was, says Kathleen, a meticulous man and a devout Christian, but there was something of a skeleton in the cupboard.

TRAGEDY

James was a governor of Settle School and, much to his embarrassment, his son John ran away to see the world.

There was tragedy, too. A son and a daughter died after being vaccinated and James barred the rest of his off-spring from ever having them.

During their years of trading, the Lamberts have been inextricably linked with life in the village, and beyond.

They published the Settle Almanac, a mine of information that ended two years after the First World War began, and it was James who inspired local historian Rev George Brown — a local pastor of the Zion Congregationalist Church — to have his writing published.

▶ PRETTY MAIDS:

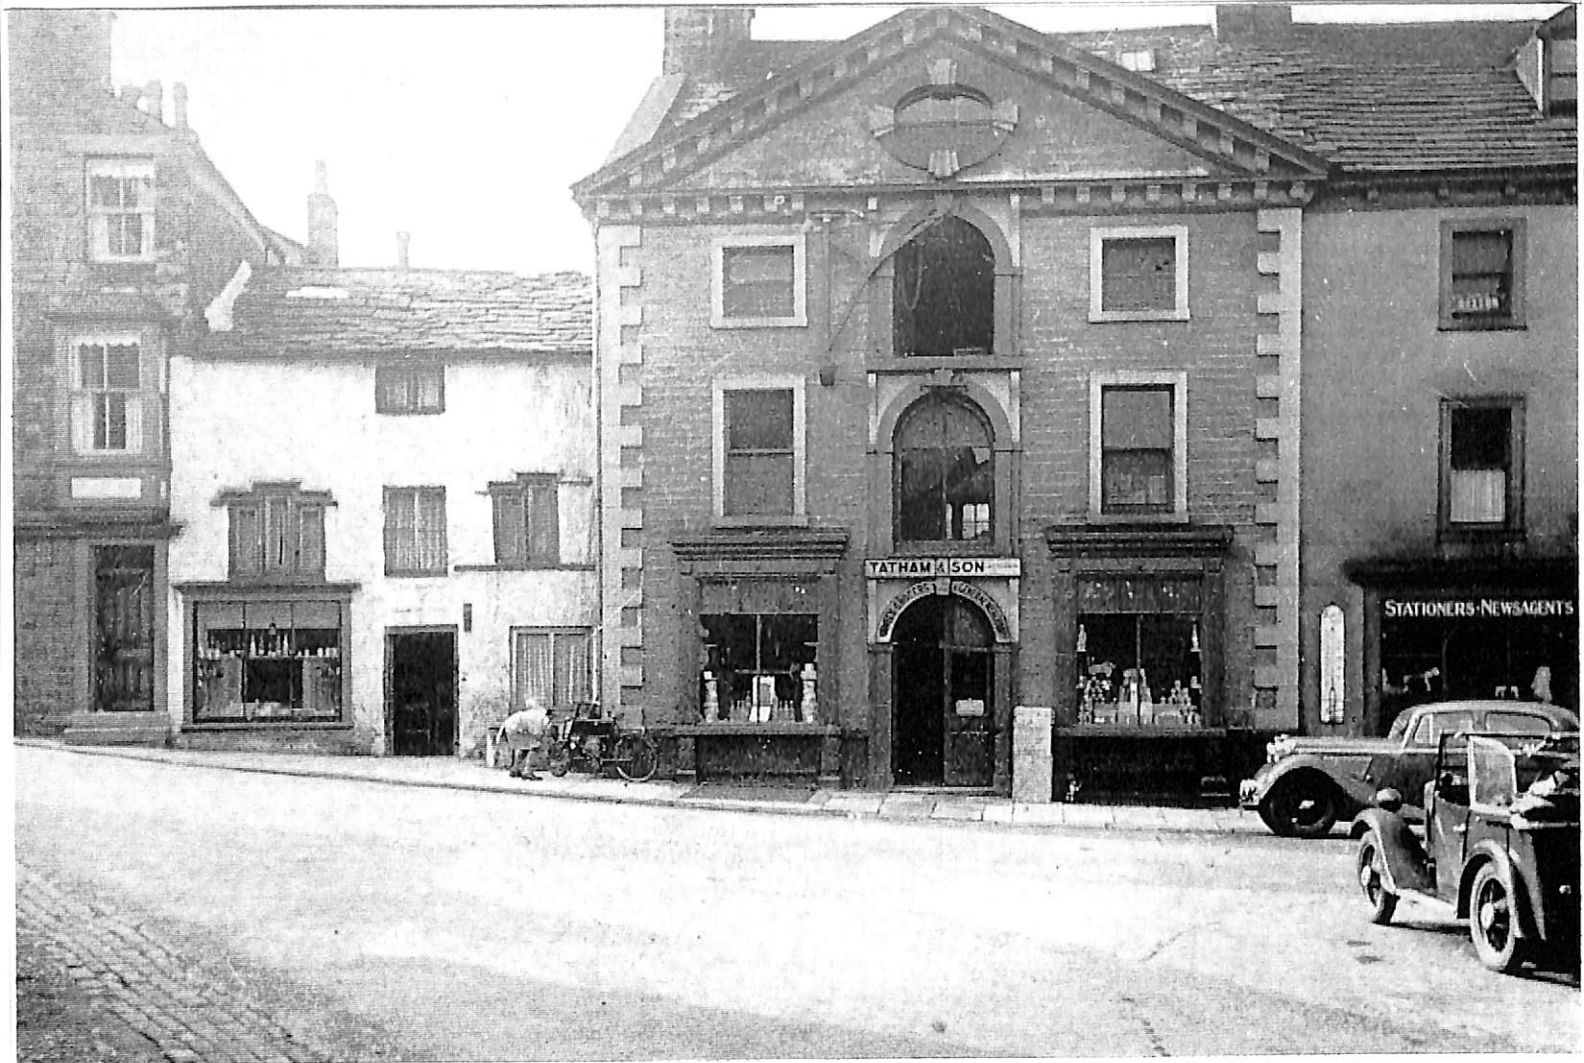

Kathleen and the shop staff dressed up in Victorian costumes this week in honour of their founding "father"

Kathleen, her daughter, Jeanne Draper, and those who work for them in the shop are involved in a bit of nostalgia this week — they're dressing up in Victorian costume in honour of their founding "father".

But in those distant days, James could never have envisaged that those from afar would be crossing the portals of the shop which now boasts novelties, toys, fancy goods as well as newspapers and magazines, books and stationery.

● Pictured, left to right, are Hazel Lord, Hanet Danby, Sheila Hodgson, Kathleen Lambert, Jeanne Draper, Margaret Moon and Avril Perfect.
