

Benjamin Woolerton, navy and his accident prone family

The graveyard contains the bodies of numerous heroes and heroines with impressive gravestones. There are a few characters who made their name in other ways, but there were hundreds of burials of ordinary folk who worked hard throughout their lives and are buried in unmarked graves. The Woolertons were one such family, trying to make a living by taking the opportunities provided by the railway mania of the nineteenth century. Unfortunately, they had more than their fair share of bad luck.

Benjamin Woolerton, born in 1847 in Morpeth, Northumberland was the eldest son of George Woolerton, a sawyer, and his wife Mary Short. George and Mary had travelled all around the country to find work – Morpeth, Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire, Bedford, Cambridgeshire, Chorley and Kirkby Lonsdale. By 1871 George, Mary and three sons found themselves in Tams Street, Giggleswick. As skilled tradesmen, sawyers and carpenters were in demand for the building of the Settle to Carlisle railway and would have been paid relatively well. George died in 1872, aged 58 and is buried in the Ancient graveyard. Mary joined her sons Benjamin, John and George who were all working up at Ribbleshead. In 1877, at Chapel-le-Dale, 62 year old Mary married a widowed railway labourer George Drury, ten years her junior, and they moved away.

Whilst passing through Saffron Walden Benjamin had met and married Betsy Sell. At the time of the 1871 census, Benjamin, also a sawyer, Betsy and their four children lived next door to George and Mary in Tams Street. For some reason Benjamin became a general railway labourer. Betsy remained industrious giving birth to 12 children whilst Benjamin was working at Ribbleshead. After the railway was built they settled back in Settle in Church Street and then in Craven Cottages.

Despite such a physical job Benjamin lived to the age of 82 and Betsy to the age of 71. They are buried in the unmarked Old grave AX15 with two daughters Emma, aged 14, and Mary Anne (Annie), aged 17. Annie had a tragic death in 1887 whilst working as a servant for Dr William Marshall Watts, a Professor of Chemistry and Physics, teaching at Giggleswick school, who lived at Prospect Terrace [LSA, 1]. Her dress caught fire on the gas stove and, in her panic, Annie ran from room to room which would have made her dress burn faster. She survived for 40 agonising hours and was attended by Dr Edgar.

A DOMESTIC SERVANT BURNED TO DEATH AT SETTLE.

About nine o'clock on Friday morning a domestic servant named Annie Woolerton (17), in the service of Dr Watts, at Prospect Terrace, Settle, whilst engaged upon her household duties had her back turned for the moment to a gas stove. Her dress caught fire, and she ran from room to room, the flames being fanned by the rapid progression, the apartments being set on fire. The barking and demonstrations of a dog attracted the attention of the neighbours, who found the girl in the attic dreadfully burnt. Dr Edgar was soon in attendance. The girl died yesterday morning, after enduring great pain for forty hours. The fires in the rooms were extinguished by the neighbours.

Benjamin and Betsy's eldest son William stayed in Settle, living on Proctor's Row and working as a railway platelayer. His wife, Elizabeth Hedley, was from Durham and had spent her life in domestic service at Barnard Castle and Tadcaster. When they married [ph2] Elizabeth already had a daughter, Emily Annie Hedley, who was brought up in Durham by her grandparents but still had regular contact settleresearch@gmail.com with her mum in Settle. They married on 9 March 1899 and son Benjamin was born three months later. It's not clear how William and Elizabeth met. Emily Annie married carpenter Robert Armstrong and they had a delightful photo [ph2] taken by the Horners when they visited Settle from Darlington.

Descendants remember that William was known to play the tuba and walked across the fields, playing the instrument, to practice with Giggleswick Brass Band. In the 1920s the family moved to live in the Railway Cottages by Cammock Lane until Elizabeth died and then William lived with Benjamin and his family in High Hill Grove Street.

Their son Benjamin had a nasty accident when he was eight [LSA] breaking his leg when a stone from a wall fell on him. He was taken to Leeds infirmary and recovered, fortunately. He worked as a grocer and married Kate Stapleton Edmond.

William and Elizabeth had another son, John Wilfred, after Benjamin. Descendants have records describing that son John Wilfred 'Wilf' worked for the Midland Railway. Unfortunately he died, aged 18, 'as a result of a shunting

The Woolertons

Benjamin and Betsy's daughter Mary Jane Woolerton married Edgar William Brown, who worked as a joiner for Walter Morrison MP up at Malham Tarn Hall. Their son, Son William Edgar Brown became a postman and van driver in Skipton and, in 1936, married Kathleen Hartley, a clogger's daughter. In the war William Edgar joined the RAF, initially as an Aircraftman, 2nd class, the lowest rank possible within the RAF. By 1941 he was posted to the naval base in Singapore. In 'the Fall of Singapore' the well-drilled and equipped Japanese forces destroyed British ships, pushing back the British forces into Singapore. On 8 February 1942 the Japanese launched their air, land and sea attack on Singapore and 70,000 British men surrendered on 15 February. This was too late for William Edgar, and around 5,000 others, who was killed on 9 February. His body was never recovered. He is remembered on the Giggleswick Bridge memorial as well as the Settle memorial. His widow remarried.

Edgar William's cousin, and William Edgar's uncle, Alan James Brown was an extremely successful athlete winning numerous awards [ph3]. He started life as a tailor but became a policemen after a short spell in the army. His records tell us he was 5 foot 9 inches tall. On his left forearm he had tattoos of two women and on his right forearm had a tattoo of Buffalo Bill and Faith Hope and Charity. Unfortunately he died in 1921 aged just 36.

Going back a generation, several of Benjamin and Betsy's children populate the graveyard in unmarked graves. Son George Woolerton, aged 20, also had a bad accident, breaking his arm and injuring his back at Watershed Mill [LSA] where he worked as an overlooker. George and his wife Clara Edith Ward are in New HX1 and close by in New FX1 Frank Woolerton and his wife Minnie Howard are buried. Bachelors John and Harry Woolerton, both labourers, are in the grave New KX10.

9. Accident to a young man named George Woolerton, at the Shed Mill, Settle, who had his arm broken in three places and also sustained severe injuries to his back.

On 13 December 1916 Benjamin and Betsy's daughter Ellen Woolerton married Charles Peachey [ph1] who had worked in the Bradford woollen mills and also became a sergeant in the 1/6th Duke of Wellington regiment. After serving for two and a half years, at the beginning of November 1917, Charles was awarded a Military medal for gallant conduct on the field. Charles had only been back in the trenches for a week when he was one of three men from the same regiment killed by shellfire on the Western Front on 11 December 1917. Thirty years later Ellen married engineer Thomas Preston Lord, the grandson of preacher John Lord. Ellen was 86 when she died and is buried with Thomas in New IX44.

Benjamin and Betsy's youngest child Fred Woolerton served in the war as a gunner in the Royal Garrison Artillery, known as the 'technical' branch of the Royal Artillery. After the war Fred became a policeman. He married the wonderfully named Lettis Frisby, a gardener's daughter from Lincolnshire. She had come to the area to work in domestic service, most likely for William Peverill Turnbull, a retired inspector of schools, who lived at Holly Bank in Giggleswick with his large family and array of servants. Fred and Lettis moved to live in Darwen, Lancashire with their family.

Going back a further generation, Benjamin's younger brothers John and George had also moved to Giggleswick and then to Ribblesdale. John married Jane Elizabeth Goss, the daughter of Henry Goss, another carpenter who found work on the Settle and Carlisle railway. They married at Chapel-le-Dale in 1874. Unfortunately John died, aged just 33, in London. Jane Elizabeth married a labourer Thomas Webster who seemed happy to take on John's three children.

Benjamin's brother George Woolerton was an elusive man, which is always a bit suspicious. In 1880 he married Emma Currin from Crick, Northamptonshire. At the time of the following two censuses Emma lived firstly with George's parents in Giggleswick and then with three daughters in Crick but with no sign of George. George was a bit busy elsewhere it seems. In 1881 George was ordered to pay out 2 shillings a week to Joanna Pike as maintenance for her daughter Kate Ethel Pike whom George had fathered, just a few weeks before his marriage to Emma. Naughty George. Wife Emma died aged 33 at the birth of a fourth daughter. The girls were brought up by Emma's sister. Within a year George had married Mary Emily Collinson but by the next census return described himself as a single man. George died aged 69.

Joanna Pike, of Crick, obtained an order for 2s. a week against George Woolerton, a married man, a Sawyer on the new line of railway at Crick.

What happened to George's illegitimate daughter? George would have had to pay quite a bit of maintenance as Kate Ethel survived and was brought up by her Pike grandparents. Kate Ethel had an illegitimate son of her own, Horace John Pike, and then moved to Willesden, West London and lived with a labourer Richard Warren. She had four children with him before they married in 1916, just before Richard served in the war for the Navy. They had another daughter after the war.

Meanwhile Kate Ethel's mother, Joanna Pike, lived most of her life in Chester with her younger sister Martha who had married a book keeper Thomas Hughes. Incredibly, in 1935, at the age of 72, Joanna became the second wife of 80 year old Ernest Albert Thwaites, who had held a 'responsible position' at Lloyds Bank in Chester [3]. A year later Ernest had to go into a nursing home and died two years after that. Perhaps Joanna had been his nurse or housekeeper? Whether she had or not, it's never too late for love.

Mr. Ernest A. Thwaites.

His many friends in Chester, and particularly former colleagues at Lloyds Bank, heard with regret of the death of Mr. Ernest Albert Thwaites, which occurred at the Fairholme Nursing Home, Woodlands-road, Hough Green, on Thursday last week, in his 84th year. Mr. Thwaites, who had lived at the Nursing Home for the past two years, held, until his retirement some years ago, a responsible position at the Chester branch of Lloyds Bank, Foregate-street. With his wife, he was a regular attendant at St. Peter's Church, Chester. He is survived by a widow, one son—Mr Arthur Thwaites, who is a member of the staff of the Newbury branch of Lloyds Bank—and one daughter
